

2012 Gindroz Prize Winner Talia Perry

Talia Perry, 2012: The relationship between Ballet Performances and the Architecture of the Performance Spaces

Talia Perry, a fourth year architecture student, was selected as the winner of the 2012 the Gindroz Prize. She plans to study and draw the buildings for ballet performances in Vienna, Paris and Dresden. Before beginning her architecture studies, Talia studied ballet and performed in the New Jersey-New York area. Her interest is in how architecture influences ballet and how ballet has been influenced by the spaces in which it is performed. She will attend performances and study the way the spaces inside and outside are presently used and the interaction between the building, the performers and the audience.

She will meet the Gindroz' in Paris where she intends to spend nine days of her travel program.

Carnegie
Mellon
University